

The New Face of Ageing: Implications for Nursing & the Future of Healthcare

CRUISING TANGALOOMA, MORETON ISLAND

WHAT THIS CONFERENCE IS ABOUT

When we hear the words 'aged care', many of us picture a nursing home. Yet only around four per cent of older Australians actually live in residential aged care. The other ninety-six per cent are the people we see every day in emergency departments, medical wards, operating theatres, oncology units, renal services, general practice, rehabilitation, community nursing and outpatient clinics.

This conference isn't about residential aged care. It's about the people who are quietly reshaping every part of our healthcare system.

Australia is experiencing one of the most significant demographic shifts in its history. People are living longer than previous generations, often with multiple chronic conditions, greater functional complexity and higher expectations of the healthcare system. At the same time, advances in technology, artificial intelligence, personalised medicine and new models of care are transforming how health services are delivered. Together, these changes are reshaping nursing practice across every clinical setting.

Nurses working in emergency departments, primary care, acute care, perioperative services, mental health, rehabilitation, community nursing and specialist services all provide care to older adults with increasingly complex health needs. Understanding the physiological, psychological, social and technological influences on ageing has become an essential component of contemporary nursing practice.

This conference explores the changing face of ageing through a future-focused lens. Participants will examine the impact of population ageing on healthcare delivery, challenge ageist assumptions, explore contemporary approaches to chronic disease management, frailty, medication safety and cognitive health, and consider how consumer expectations are influencing person-centred care. Emerging technologies, including artificial intelligence, remote monitoring and digital health, will also be explored alongside new models of care that support independence, healthy ageing and ageing in place.

Importantly, this conference asks participants to look beyond today's healthcare system and consider what nursing may look like in the decades ahead. As science, technology and society continue to evolve, nurses will play a central role in ensuring that care remains evidence-based, compassionate and responsive to the needs, values and expectations of future generations of older Australians.

By combining contemporary evidence with practical strategies and forward-thinking discussion, The New Face of Ageing will equip nurses with the knowledge and confidence to provide an exceptional nursing service to the people who will increasingly shape the future of healthcare.

DAY 2: 21/06/2027 | Conference Day

0900 – 1000: The New Face of Ageing

Australia's population is ageing, but today's older person is very different from previous generations. Advances in medicine, improvements in public health and changing lifestyles mean people are living longer, often with multiple chronic conditions while remaining active, engaged and determined to maintain their independence. As the number of older Australians continues to grow, nurses across every healthcare setting will increasingly care for people with complex and evolving health needs.

This opening session explores the demographic changes shaping healthcare, challenges common myths about ageing and examines the opportunities and challenges created by increased longevity. Participants will gain an understanding of why ageing has become one of the defining healthcare issues of the twenty-first century and why every nurse, regardless of their clinical specialty, needs a sound understanding of contemporary ageing.

1000 – 1100: Ageism: The Bias We Rarely Talk About

Unlike many other forms of discrimination, ageism often goes unnoticed in healthcare. Assumptions about what is "normal" for older people can influence assessment, diagnosis, treatment decisions and even communication with patients and families. These unconscious biases may lead to poorer health outcomes, reduced independence and diminished quality of care.

This session examines how ageism presents in everyday nursing practice and explores practical strategies for recognising and challenging age-related stereotypes. Participants will reflect on how language, attitudes and clinical decision making can either support or undermine the dignity, autonomy and wellbeing of older adults while promoting a more inclusive approach to healthcare.

1100 – 1130: Break

1130 – 1230: Living Longer with Chronic Disease

Many older adults now live for decades with one or more chronic health conditions, making complexity rather than diagnosis the defining feature of modern healthcare. Nurses are increasingly required to coordinate care across multiple conditions while balancing treatment goals, quality of life, functional ability and patient preferences.

This session explores the realities of caring for people living with chronic disease and highlights the importance of comprehensive assessment, multidisciplinary collaboration and person-centred care. Participants will consider how nursing practice can move beyond treating individual diseases to supporting people to live well despite ongoing health challenges.

1230 – 1300: Frailty: More Than Just Age

Frailty is not an inevitable consequence of ageing, nor is it simply a reflection of chronological age. It is a clinical syndrome that increases vulnerability to illness, functional decline and adverse health outcomes, yet it can often be identified early and managed effectively.

This session explores the biological and functional changes associated with frailty, including the important roles of nutrition, sleep, physical activity and sarcopenia. Participants will examine strategies to maintain function, promote recovery and support healthy ageing while recognising opportunities to intervene before frailty leads to significant loss of independence.

1300 – 1430: Lunch

1430 – 1530: The New Consumer

Today's older adults are changing the relationship between healthcare professionals and consumers. Baby Boomers and early Generation Xers have different expectations from previous generations, with many seeking greater involvement in healthcare decisions, increased access to information and personalised care that reflects their individual values and preferences. Future generations are likely to expect even more.

This session explores how changing consumer expectations are reshaping nursing practice and considers the importance of shared decision making, health literacy, cultural diversity and respectful partnerships in delivering contemporary healthcare. Participants will examine how nurses can adapt to these changing expectations while maintaining safe, evidence-informed care.

1530 – 1600: Medicines in an Ageing Population

Medicines play an essential role in managing chronic illness, yet they also represent one of the greatest risks to older adults. Polypharmacy, altered pharmacokinetics, adverse drug events and inappropriate prescribing contribute significantly to hospital admissions and reduced quality of life.

This session examines the unique challenges associated with medication management in older people and explores strategies to reduce medication-related harm. Participants will discuss medication review, deprescribing principles and practical approaches to supporting safe, effective medicine use across a range of healthcare settings.

Join us at the designated meeting spot to catch up and discuss the events of the day. The conference Facilitators and Presenter will be at the venue to answer any of your queries.

DAY 4: 23/06/2027 | Conference Day

0900 – 1000: Technology, AI and the Future of Ageing

Healthcare is entering an era where technology is transforming the way care is delivered. Artificial intelligence, wearable devices, smart homes, remote monitoring and virtual healthcare are creating new opportunities to support independence, detect deterioration earlier and improve access to services. At the same time, these innovations raise important ethical, professional and practical questions for nurses.

This session explores how emerging technologies are changing the experience of ageing and considers how nurses can embrace innovation while ensuring technology complements, rather than replaces, compassionate, person-centred care.

1000 – 1100: Rethinking Aged Care

The future of aged care extends far beyond residential facilities. Increasingly, healthcare systems are supporting people to remain independent and live safely in their own homes for as long as possible. Community-based services, Hospital in the Home programs, new accommodation models and integrated care pathways are changing how care is delivered.

This session examines the evolving landscape of aged care and explores innovative approaches that place independence, choice and quality of life at the centre of service delivery. Participants will consider how nurses can contribute to models of care that better meet the expectations of current and future generations.

1100 – 1130: Break

1130 – 1230: Brain Health and Cognitive Ageing

Healthy ageing involves far more than physical health. Cognitive, emotional and psychological wellbeing are equally important in maintaining independence and quality of life. Older adults may experience delirium, dementia, depression, anxiety or social isolation, each presenting unique challenges for assessment and care.

This session explores common conditions affecting brain health and highlights the importance of early recognition, effective communication and evidence-based nursing interventions. Participants will examine strategies to promote cognitive health while supporting both individuals and their families through often complex healthcare journeys.

1230 – 1300: Difficult Conversations

Some of the most important conversations nurses have with older people involve uncertainty, changing health status and planning for the future. Discussions about decision-making capacity, goals of care, advance care planning and end-of-life wishes require skill, empathy and confidence.

This session explores practical communication strategies that support respectful, person-centred conversations while helping individuals and families make informed decisions that reflect their values, preferences and priorities. Participants will also consider the ethical principles that underpin these discussions and the nurse's role in advocating for patient-centred care.

1300 – 1430: Lunch

1430 – 1530: Falls Prevention: Beyond the Checklist

Falls remain one of the leading causes of injury, hospitalisation and loss of independence in older adults, yet effective prevention requires much more than completing a risk assessment tool. Falls are often the result of multiple interacting factors including frailty, medication use, impaired balance, environmental hazards, vision changes and acute illness.

This session explores contemporary approaches to falls prevention that move beyond compliance-based strategies to focus on comprehensive assessment, early intervention and maintaining mobility. Participants will examine practical, evidence-informed approaches that reduce falls while supporting confidence, function and independence.

1530 – 1600: The Older Person of 2040

The final session looks beyond today's healthcare system to consider what ageing and nursing may look like over the next two decades. Advances in precision medicine, artificial intelligence, genomics, robotics and predictive healthcare are likely to transform how disease is prevented, diagnosed and managed. At the same time, changing demographics, consumer expectations, workforce pressures and climate change will continue to influence healthcare delivery.

This forward-looking session encourages participants to reflect on the opportunities and challenges that lie ahead and to consider how the nursing profession can continue to lead compassionate, evidence-based healthcare in an increasingly complex and technologically advanced world.

1700 – 1800: Farewell Function | Guests Welcome

Our last night together, so it's a time to celebrate what we have learnt, the new friends we have made, and the fabulous profession of Nursing. Complimentary drinks will be served, and you are welcome to bring your travelling companion with you.

HOW TO DRESS ON A CRUISE SHIP

Most cruise lines offer a casual atmosphere onboard. Casual attire is the norm during the day, and there is no formal dress code at night. However, many passengers choose to change into something slightly less casual for dinner.

At least once per sailing, during which passengers are encouraged to dress up. While you rarely see tuxedos or evening gowns, suits and cocktail dresses are quite common.

Additionally, ships usually host several themed nights, such as White Parties, '70s, or '80s Night, Hawaiian or even Mexican during each sailing. It's a good idea to bring along a few themed items.

NB: Closer to your sail date you will be able to see what the exact theme nights are being held via your cruise companies app.
